--------------	---

BEST	UOH, AA, play speed, and foot quickness
------	---

WORST	Doesn't have an array of pass rush moves and doesn't have a plan when rushing
-------	---

PROJECTION	Starting DE that can use his very good hand fighting ability and agility to get to the QB and play strength and AA to fill gaps and play the run. Mainly a weakside defender but, can be used on the interior line and can generate pass rush pressure on his own.
------------	--

SCHEME FIT	A 43 scheme that will allow him to use his pass rush and run stopping ability on the edge

SUMMARY

A 7-year pro that has started 48 games out of 72 played. He's played DE in a 43 scheme for his first two years under HC Dan Quinn as the DC and now his new DC will be a coach that came to the team the same year he did, Marquand Manuel. He has solid height, weight, and arm length with very good AA, pass rush, foot speed, lateral agility, pursuit, and up field burst with good play strength to get through or around the OL. He has a good release and up field burst on the LOS at the snap of the ball in the one gap technique as he explodes through the gap he is responsible for. Displays good ankle flexion and foot speed, with good AA, competitive toughness, and play speed in diagnosing plays and getting to the ball carrier on the weak or strong side at the LOS, as well as good play strength. Has good mental processing and good AA in the run game to understand leverage and has the ability to work through the trash to get to the ball carrier on the strong or weak side. He is good in his lateral agility and foot speed to either, get in the gap and get the ball carrier down, or slide along the line to plug the right hole in a zone-rushing scheme. He can be used as a two-gap defender with the ability to move his weight and pick up his feet and not be on the ground unnecessarily. Good pass rush ability, UOH, and foot movement and agility at his size to get around or through solid offensive linemen and around the edge and get flat in pursuit of the QB. Has the FBI and agility to move quickly at the snap of the ball on TE stunts to get around the corner without wasting movement and can get skinny in the gap at 6'3" 280 and attack the QB and/or strip the ball at the same time. Always shows good competitive toughness and effort in both the run and pass in his pursuit through the play and good agility to be able to step over chop blocks and play until the whistle has blown. Does not have an array of moves or plans when rushing in the pass or run game. He will struggle against players that are equal in talent or above with a tendency to lose his depth to the pocket allowing the QB to step up or in to the space he just occupied. His hand fighting ability, AA, FBI, and play speed at his height and weight are very good all in one package. Has the ability with the UOH to play at DT and still get penetration through the hole. Overall a starting DE/DT that you can win with when kept in a 43 scheme and not asked to dominate.
