SUMMARY

4th year WR who has 22 starts in 40 games played including starts in 5 games in 2017 before tearing his Achilles Tendon in Week 5. He has played his entire career under Head Coach Andy Reid, three Offensive Coordinators, Doug Pederson ('15), Brad Childress ('16), and Matt Nagy ('17), and Wide Receivers coach Greg Lewis ('17), in the West Coast offense that implement a Pass heavy, Air-Raid offense that incorporates many College/Spread concepts including many Motion and Option plays from unorthodox formations. Played both X/Z alignments as well as in Slot, with a majority of plays ran out of X/Z alignments in short and intermediate areas against Zone coverage. Very good size and weight, good build and frame with very good arm and hand size, solid AA with solid COD, solid play speed, solid foot speed, solid agility, solid acceleration, adequate explosiveness, and adequate balance. Has solid release against Zone from X/Z alignments and in the Slot, solid acceleration to close space between himself and the defender, keeps a neutral stem with level eyes and shoulders to not give away the route. Solid at recognizing Zone defenses, using solid COD and agility, he will plant his foot and find open space in short and intermediate areas with post and flat routes. Solid at using a combination of his hands and head fakes to separate from Physical DBs at top of routes, solid at using footspeed to drive his foot into the ground with solid COD and agility to quickly stop and turn back toward the throw on curl and comeback routes. Solid soft-hands, good at tracking, looking the ball into his hands, and good at adjusting to make catches in front or behind his body when in space, solid at high pointing the football allowing him to make catches above his head where his is very good in jump ball situations. After the catch he is a solid north/south runner who turns up field to gain extra yards. Good competitive toughness allows him to block well in both the run and pass, plays well through the whistle, and will not shy away from contact during YAC. With only having adequate explosiveness he struggles to get off the LOS in X/Z alignments and Slot against athletic and physical DBs who line up in Press Man and Press Man with Jam. During his stem his adequate balance allows for physical DBs who play Press Man to knock him off his route where he then struggles to get back to a neutral stem. Struggles to use a combination of leverage and route adjustment to manipulate the hips of defenders allowing speedy DBs to run with him throughout the route and physical DBs to knock him off his break at the top of routes that he rounds out rather than sharply cuts. In Zone coverage he does not quickly identify openings in space. Adequate explosiveness hinders him from consistently separating on vertical routes in both Zone and Man Coverages on post, corner, and fly routes. On intermediate routes he tends to wait for the ball to arrive rather than driving toward the ball and will not quickly get his head around to look for the pass. Struggles with contested catches due adequate hands stemming from him being more of a body catcher and failing to shield the ball from defenders. Adequate adjust on throws that he must extend his arms to the side or below his hips especially against physical DBs with good ball skills. In the open field does not have the elusiveness or explosiveness to make men miss one on one. Struggles to be productive on 3rd and 4th down. Overall, he is a complementary Outside (X/Z) WR who can be line up in the Slot as well, used best in short and intermediate areas against Zone relying on his solid acceleration to quickly cover space, solid COD to separate, and solid hands and good adjust to make catches in stride as well as block well. Will struggle in sharp cutting routes that require timing and quick separation as well as be limited as a vertical element.
