PROJECTION Starting X/Z you can win in spite of who can help at all levels with full speed routes such as Slants, Speed Outs, Posts, or Corners and uses good COD in intermediate areas with Dig and Out routes. Lacks the elusiveness and play strength to be a YAC threat.

SCHEME FIT Any system where he can frequently run in/out breaking routes in short to intermediate areas with Post and Go routes sprinkled in.

SUMMARY

3rd year WR who has started 13 of 48 career contests, including 5 in 2018 (Wks 10, 13, 15-17) at the X position in 11 personnel packages of HC Andy Reid's scheme that greatly stretches defenses vertically and horizontally. 1st season under OC Eric Bieniemy and 2nd season under WRs coach Greg Lewis, frequently running Post and Go routes from Outside and short/intermediate routes from reduced alignments. Solid height and weight with good arm length and adequate upper body muscle mass with very low body fat, displaying solid overall AA featuring good COD and quickness, solid acceleration, agility, and explosiveness, and adequate balance. Shows good competitiveness, running routes hard and playing through the whistle on play calls that favor him. Good release in all areas; uses solid agility and acceleration into stem vs. Soft Press and shows solid physical toughness vs. Jam with good, quick UOH while gaining ideal leverage via a whip move or a forearm wipe. Displays solid separation quickness with full speed routes such as Speed Outs, Drags, and Slants due to good mental processing to sit down in short to intermediate voids or to attack DB blind spot before snapping off route with good COD on Digs and Outs with solid agility and acceleration, as well as good quickness downfield on Posts. Hands are solid; catches the ball in short to intermediate areas from stationary position consistently and body catches on the move. Solid adjust/body control; displaying ability to trap low and away passes near the sideline with solid hands. Shows very good mental toughness to get open and make big plays inside of 2-minute drill. Showing good mental processing and very good mental toughness to run out of bounds and extend the ball out to reach for the sticks when necessary. Shows solid blocking ability on the frontside with good mental processing and competitiveness, setting up good leverage off of the LOS from all alignments and sticking long arms onto DBs with solid physical toughness, using foot quickness to sustain vs. CBs who possess solid or lower strength, and peeling off of first blocking target when he sees a teammate ready to overtake or the ball carrier is passing by and then goes to find more work. In limited opportunities, displayed ability to jump and reach back slightly on the run to corral pass behind him over the MOF. Adequate technique out of speed release off of LOS can lead him to lose balance as his base can get too narrow with too deep of a drive step, causing him to slip. Strong, long-armed Press CBs who can match his hand quickness to get both hands on him within 5 yards can prevent him from getting downfield into his route due to adequate play strength. In short areas, reaches too far with plant foot on hard-breaking routes such as a Curl, giving CBs a cue to close on. Jumps up to catch routine passes on the run too often, slowing his momentum and limiting YAC ability. Adequate in contested catch situations with downfield passes above his head due to not coming back and/or jumping up to the football aggressively and adequate play strength. Displays adequate YAC ability due to adequate play strength, balance, and elusiveness; fails to shake DBs in the open field when squared up and is tackled consistently by DBs who possess solid or better strength. Competitiveness is adequate on the backside of run plays, watching the ball instead of attacking DB physically. When blocking, long-armed, physical DBs can maintain control of him due to adequate play strength, and smart DBs can shed with push/pull technique as he lunges forward with arms. In the NFL, a starting X/Z you can win in spite of who can help at all levels with full speed routes such as Slants, Speed Outs, Posts, or Corners and uses good COD in intermediate areas with Dig and Out routes. Lacks the elusiveness and play strength to be a threat with the ball in his hands.
