WORST	UOH, Competitive Toughness, Zone Blocking, Bend, Finish
PROJECTION	Durable, swing OT playing on either side who can be a stabilizing presence on a line needing depth. He is most valuable in a run oriented gap scheme offense with a lot of play action to utilize his lateral movement when in pass protection. Lacks the ability and bend to face top tier talent consistently or perform in a zone based run scheme.
SCHEME FIT	Any run oriented gap scheme where a lot of play action is used in the passing game offering him a wide range of set options

SUMMARY

4th year offensive tackle who has started in all 48 games with no impactful injuries. 4th year in head coach Dirk Koetter's system where he is a left tackle and a key cog in the passing protection and the run game. Good height and weight, with very good arm length and good hand size, displaying solid athletic ability with marginal mid and lower body bend and good lateral movement. Adequate Gap Blocking technique displaying solid get off and pad level on combination Deuce and Trey blocks often gaining ground as a driver and holding ground using his size well as a base blocker. Travels well in space to the second level often taking good angles on 2nd and 3rd tier defenders leading to solid engagements. Adequate in pass protection, displays ability to set within a wide range of techniques, his best trait is lateral movement so angle setting should be his top choice. He flashes against pure speed rushes, rarely beaten around the edge to straight line speed adjusting angle sets to vertical sets well. Displays solid mental processing to different pass rushing techniques and blitzes often improving recognition to Stunts/Twists as the game goes on (out of ~200 snaps annotated showed good recognition in quarters 2-4), and resulting in adequate play speed to respond. Shows good timing on first strikes especially when lateral movement is required, also flashes ability to trap defenders hands but needs to improve consistency. Struggles with his stance (in both 2 and 3 point), has trouble bending from the waist down showing little lower body functional strength leading to adequate play strength. In the run game this leads to him leaning forward slightly up to and during engagement sometimes with a head tilt down just before contact. Displays marginal Zone blocking ability, this poor stance on reach blocks can lead to him losing balance through contact easily. Struggles with cutting off backside 3-technique tackles in Outside Zone plays, has marginal footwork and lower body athleticism to hook or sufficiently guide defenders to the sideline. Shows marginal competitive toughness especially as a run blocker versus top tier talent, his game does not improve with defenders like Miami's Suh pancaking him on a combination block. Displays poor finish in blocks across the board with the little violence and even disengaging from blocks prematurely as the play goes away. In pass protection, the lower body bend issues are displayed pre-engagement as he is vulnerable to club and swipe moves to his upper trunk. Displays marginal UOH, struggles with first strike consistently leaving his hands as vulnerable target to defenders losing leverage quickly to circular force moves. As the engagements go on, rarely shows ability to play long and often not driving his feet, so he loses control of defenders he once controlled. Displays marginal Anchor ability, especially against bull or speed to power rushes making his breastplate a large target, losing leverage, and relying on his size to stop defender's momentum. His footwork is a problem here, refuses to hop relying on staggered stance but often losing his post foot and an inability to recover. Overall, he is a durable lineman who you can with as a back up swing tackle playing on either side who can be a stabilizing presence on a line needing depth. He is most valuable in a run oriented gap scheme offense with a lot of play action to utilize his lateral movement when in pass protection. Lacks the ability and bend to face top tier talent consistently or perform in a zone based run scheme
