PROJECTION	A starting OL you can win with who brings versatility to an OL by being able to play both OG and OT. Designed for a Gap/Power blocking scheme that uses his ability to fire off the ball quickly and drive at the POA. He is better suited at tackle because of his quick feet, good lateral movement, and solid technique in Pass Pro. Struggles with reading blitzes and stunts from the interior, play strength, and lack of ability to pull make him a liability at the guard position.

SCHEME FIT	Best suited for a quick passing Gap/Power blocking scheme.

SUMMARY

A 11th year starter who has started 112 out of 124 games played, including 16 starts in 2016. Healthy throughout most of his career, only missing 5 games in 11 seasons, and missing no games in 2016. Playing OT for 10 seasons, he made the move in 2016 to G, spending his 2nd season in Adam Gase's mixture of West Coast, Air Coryell passing offense, with a Zone-blocking run scheme. Very good height, weight, hands, and arm length displaying solid AA with good balance, quick feet, good lateral movement, and adequate flexibility in his hips. Good competitive toughness, extremely aggressive finishing off blocks consistently blocking through the whistle, while displaying mental toughness late in games, rising to the occasion while staying consistent in his technique. Solid mental processing in the run game, solid at identifying 2nd level run fits in both power and zone runs. Good ability on Base blocks, fires off the ball quickly with good play speed at the snap staying low, displaying good UOH to gain leverage, using good hand placement with good base to push weaker DTs into the second level. On Down blocks he stays square to the line of scrimmage, and at contact able to get his face mask between the outside shoulder and neck of the defender, with good base to drive at the POA. Solid in Pass Pro, drives off front foot to create space to get to the set point, mirroring defenders laterally displaying quick feet. Good punch timing, finding the strike zone using violent UOH to gain leverage, and twist elbows to counteract the defender locking and controlling DTs. Struggles in Zone blocking, poorly executing Reach blocks by not getting to play-side shoulder of the DT, struggles to bring his hips across the target stopping him from squaring up, and driving down field. Very slow in space, not taking the proper angles to seal defenders, not stopping his feet, and lunging at the POA hurt him when attempting to engage with defenders at the 2nd level. Struggles when asked to pull, is slow getting out and around the corner, not showing the ability to flip his hips to wall off defenders when executing Pin-Pull Sweeps. Struggles with mental processing in Pass Pro from the interior, not executing Area reads correctly versus blitzes and stunts by not switching off to the correct defender, allowing free lanes and open holes to the QB. Struggles with quicker, agile DTs in the interior during Pass Pro, not being able to maintain a good inside post-foot to take away the inside pass rush from DTs who are quick off the ball. Struggles with DTs who can match his power in Pass Pro, displaying marginal anchor ability by not sticking his feet in the ground to build his house, exhibiting marginal play strength to hold ground against a good bull rush being pushed back into the pocket. Overall, a starting OL you can win with who brings versatility to an OL by being able to play both OG and OT. Designed for a Gap/Power blocking scheme that uses his ability to fire off the ball quickly and drive at the POA. He is better suited at tackle because of his quick feet, good lateral movement, and solid technique in Pass Pro. Struggles with reading blitzes and stunts from the interior, play strength, and lack of ability to pull, make him a liability at the guard position.
