| PROJECTION | Good starting outside or slot receiver who would be used best as a deep to intermediate threat on play action and could get yards after the catch with his ability to be elusive on slant and drag routes. Uses his elite speed, explosion, acceleration, and very good agility on deep/high speed COD routes. Limitations in size and adequate play strength are clear weaknesses. |

SUMMARY

3-year veteran on his 1st team with the Arizona Cardinals, coached by Bruce Arians. Used by OC Harold Goodwin as a deep to intermediate threat when split outside the numbers on drop back passes and is employed inside the numbers on play action passes to work either the short or deep parts of the field. In 2015, Brown accounted for 10/35 receiving touchdowns while also eclipsing 1,000 yards receiving. He has been plagued by hamstring injuries and possesses a genetic sickle cell trait, which affects his recovery time. Brown has an even-cut frame while having adequate height and marginal weight. Arm length and hand size are both adequate. Has very good athletic ability due to his very good balance, very good agility, elite explosion and elite quickness. Exhibits very good ability to release at the LOS against off coverage and press without being jammed, due to his elite acceleration, elite play speed and very good agility, coupled with very good mental processing to recognize when to manipulate a DBs hips by stemming his routes. Separation quickness is very good; combines very good mental processing to attack various coverages with very good agility to snap down on high speed COD routes, elite play speed to beat and stack good DBs on deep routes, very good ability to find voids in coverage. Demonstrates very good hands as he shows very good manual dexterity to snatch balls out of the air, exhibits a very good catch radius that ranges from below his waist to above his head, good ability to make contested catches and has very good concentration/ball tracking skills when reeling in the deep ball. Presents very good body control/adjustment skills by having very good balance and very good awareness to keep his feet inbounds on high speed COD/deep routes. Ability to get yards after the catch is solid as he possesses good skill to accelerate the field quickly and very good agility to make very good DBs and LBs miss tackles. Has solid competitive toughness due to his good physical toughness to catch through contact and good mental toughness to raise level of play in crucial situations. Displays adequate ability to fight through contact off LOS when being jammed in press coverage as he easily gets rerouted. Exhibits adequate play strength when trying to separate with physicality at the top of his routes. When attempting to gain yards after the catch, shows adequate play strength to break tackles and fight for extra yards. Play strength is adequate; shows adequate physicality to separate at the top of his routes, adequate at beating press coverage while being jammed at the LOS and has marginal functional strength to be an effective blocker in the run game. From the stand point of competitive toughness, he shows to have adequate willingness to block in the run, adequate physical toughness as a ball carrier and adequate mental toughness to raise his level of play against better competition. Overall, he is a good starting slot receiver, who could play outside the numbers, that would be used best as a deep to intermediate threat on play action and could get yards after the catch with his ability to be elusive on slant and drag routes. Possesses elite speed, explosion, acceleration, very good agility on deep/high speed COD routes and very good hands. Limitations in size and adequate play strength are clear weaknesses.
