| BEST | Fast hands and good arm length in pass pro enable him to reset hands against the bull rush and Anchor |
| WORST | Doesn't get enough bend in run or pass pro, leads to playing high and losing balance. Forces him into recovery mode in pass pro and limits push in run blocking |
| PROJECTION | Starting OL you can win with in a Power or Zone scheme. Has the strength/size/athleticism to be a long-term performer. Needs to improve balance and pad leverage. |
| SCHEME FIT | Can perform in Zone or Power blocking schemes and Spread/WestCoast or Pro Style offenses |

SUMMARY

Sixth-year RT (first 2 years in Chicago) who has started 82 of 87 career games, including the last 52 straight games in Buffalo, where he's played for two head coaches –Anthony Lynn and Sean McDermott. His offensive coordinator in Chicago, Aaron Kromer, was also his OL coach for his first two seasons in Buffalo. Underwent foot surgery after 2013 season and was sidelined one game in 2014 by foot soreness but has only missed two others games in Buffalo, for a rib injury. Played in 2018 in an offense catered to rookie, first-round pick quarterback Josh Allen's mobility and athleticism. OC Brian Daboll's offense leaned on the Zone running game, with emphasis on Inside Zone, and with built-in RPOs, jet motion and misdirection. Passing game balanced spread formations with multiple tight-end formations. Tight ends often kept in for protection or chipping. Mills has good height and weight with strong, athletic lower-body build and good arm length. Good foot quickness, solid athletic ability and change of direction, adequate balance and bend. Very good mental processing and awareness to carry out all assignments. Displays good play speed on Zone runs, engaging quickly to position hands and keep legs moving as he engages at POA. Takes good angles on Reach blocks. As a Gap blocker, shows very good competitive toughness on combo blocks and locates quickly in second level, knowing when to climb and gets good body positioning in open space. Good in pass pro, with good Set points, quick hands and feet, and above average Anchor. Will get his arms up first and has good timing and coordination with his arms and feet on punch. Very good ability to reset hands inside to lock on against the bull rush and redirect. Good mental processing, play speed and footwork to combat swim and spin moves and to stay in front of defenders. Good recognition of stunts and twists, with proper body positioning on Vertical sets to work with LG against line games and to keep pass-rush lanes narrow. Shows very goodrecovery and resetting of hands after initial punch against the elite edge rushers, and very good anchor to fight back against second effort. Very good competitive and mental toughness despite playing for losing teams. Doesn't take plays off or give free rides to the QB. Maintains his fight to the whistle. Will plant a defender on the ground if he can catch him off balance. As a Gap blocker, adequate pad level on Drive blocking, plays high and doesn't generate enough push or get hands inside right from the snap. Can get his body on second-level defenders if they're in his crosshairs but lacks elite strength to sustain and lacks quickness to square up against faster LBs/DBs who can scuttle around him. In pass pro, plays with adequate pad level and doesn't get enough bend, leading to poor balance that results in struggles to keep both feet anchored and causes inconsistent hand placement. Adequate mental processing on Cut blocks. Goes to the ground too quickly and doesn't get enough body on defender. Overall, Mills is a good starting RT whose deficiencies are due to technique and pad level more than strength or athleticism. Good Gap blocker who plays with toughness and has the athleticism to climb into second level and take on smaller defenders. Has the strength and footwork to execute assignments in Zone running, excels on Inside zone combo blocks. In pass pro, shows very good hands and anchor and would benefit from quicker delivery by the QB. Can develop into a high-level tackle with improvedpad level and leverage.
