PROJECTION	Projects as a slot receiver due to his ability to release and create separation on short and intermediate routes vs. Press, Off, and Zone coverage. Will fit best in a system that utilizes 10 and 11 personnel groupings where he can align in the slot, be put in motion, and have a two way go to utilize his coverage processing and suddenness to separate on short and intermediate option routes and create after the catch. Lacks the deep speed to take the top off of a defense.

SUMMARY

4-Year veteran receiver who has started 37 of 55 games for Tennessee. Aligns primarily in the slot, but also split wide as an X/Z. Struggled through an injury-plagued 2015 which limited his impact and production, missing 4 games with a left knee MCL sprain, and 2 games with a rib injury. Shorter than average, with an angular build, below average arm length and hands. Good overall athletic ability, coordination and balance. Is twitchy and sudden with good lateral agility, quickness, and solid long speed. Good overall ability to release, relying upon his suddenness, body control, and lateral agility to beat Press man coverage, including the ability to manipulate outside-shaded press defenders with movement to gain an outside release. Exhibits good acceleration to challenge off-man and Zone defender cushions. Solid mental processing is exhibited in his ability to recognize and adjust his route to fill voids vs. Zone coverage, adjust his route when he sees blitzes develop pre-snap, and in his sideline/first down spatial awareness and adjustment ability. Leverages his good AA and solid coverage processing to show good play speed to operate on short and intermediate levels of the field, showing good ability to create separation by leveraging his good suddenness and body control to change direction and accelerate out of his stem, showing particular effectiveness creating space vs Man coverage on 90 degree breaking routes. Vs. Zone coverage, shows good ability to manage his speed through his route as he works to find seams and settle in space between defenders. Ball location awareness and adjustment ability is good, showing good overall ability to extend for balls thrown outside his frame, including good body adjustment and hand selection on low balls, the ability to adjust his body against his momentum and secure balls thrown behind him, as well as to track balls over his shoulder on vertical routes. Hands are good, possessing good concentration to track the ball to his hands, and good hand-eye coordination and dexterity to secure the ball. Is quick and elusive with the ball in his hands, showing solid competitive effort and displaying good vision, patience, and burst to extend plays and be a good producer after the catch, as well as on reverses and jet sweeps. Displays solid mental toughness and competitive effort to execute in the Red Zone and other critical game situations, showing situational awareness and aggressively working to finish runs. Has just adequate play strength, and struggles to execute in all areas when contacted. This is seen in his struggle to release efficiently when jammed at the LOS, as well as when he is re-routed after encountering friction in his route stem. Does not have the long speed to act as a deep threat, lacking the ability to stack and maintain separation on DBs on vertical routes. Inconsistent competitive effort to execute assignments when he is not a primary receiver, as there is a notable drop in speed when the play goes elsewhere. Is not aggressive to engage and sustain as a blocker. Overall, projects as a slot receiver due to his ability to release and create separation on short and intermediate routes vs. Press, Off, and Zone coverage. Will fit best in a system that utilizes 10 and 11 personnel groupings where he can align in the slot, be put in motion, and have a two way go to utilize his coverage processing and suddenness to separate on short and intermediate option routes. Lacks the deep speed to take the top off of a defense.
