BEST Play Speed, Mental Processing, Competitive Toughness, Gap Blocking

WORST Separation Quickness

PROJECTION Solid rotational blocking TE who you can win with that would best fit a Gap scheme. Can be used in Play action to catch the short pass, and can hold up in pass protection against good competition. Struggles with separation quickness because of his lack of agility and explosion.

SCHEME FIT Gap Scheme the utilizes to TE in Play action passing game.

SUMMARY

6th year Pro who has spent his entire career with the Seattle Seahawks and Offensive Coordinator Darrell Bevell. Willson is used predominantly as a blocking TE, and in the play action passing game in Bevell's Zone scheme. Very good height, solid weight and arm length with adequate hand size. Solid AA with good balance/quickness, solid acceleration/COD and adequate explosion/agility. Solid as a Zone blocker displaying good initial quickness with his first step to get his head across when reach blocking with good hand placement and ability to replace. Showed solid play strength with the ability to wash down a good 5 tech on I/Z. Good in combination blocks helping at the LOS then taking good angles to get to 2ndlevel defenders. Good 2ndlevel showing his AA and play strength to get on good Safeties and LBs, latch and drive them out. Good competitive toughness giving good effort and competing vs. all competition displaying some nastiness playing through the whistle and driving defenders into the ground. Good as a Gap blocker showing his ability to drive out solid DEs and good walked up LBs on a base block with good initial contact, hand placement and foot drive. Good job kicking out on Power with leverage and play strength creating a running lane for the back. Very good job lining up in the backfield for ISO on the LB displaying good pad level and initial contact latching and turning out to seal the defender. Good mental processing 2ndlevel understanding where the flow of the play is going, taking good angles and using leverage with good hand strength to latch and seal making it easy for the back to get the edge. Solid in Pass pro where he Jump sets to initiate first contact with the ability to replace the defenders hands with the AA and footwork to stay in front as a functional blocker vs solid competition. Good mental processing in the passing game scanning for work and picking up the biggest threat to the quarterback. At LOS shows solid acceleration using his hands to beat press coverage displaying a dip/rip move. Leverages in his routes stemming and leaning on defenders to create separation. Solid hands catching passes thrown in the strike zone and after the catch he showed some AA attempting to jump over a defender. Good mental processing understanding the defense, where the voids are with the ability to sit and give the quarterback an easy target. As a Zone blocker his technique gets sloppy at times, lunging causing him to miss. Has trouble vs. very good to elite DEs not having the play strength to stay latched on. In Pass protection, he struggles to anchor vs. good to elite competition giving up too much ground because of a lack of play strength. Doesn't use his feet at the LOS in his releases causing him to get jammed vs. solid LBs/Safeties. Needs route concepts to consistently get open because of his lack of agility and acceleration. After the catch he doesn't have the AA, COD or agility to make people miss. Overall, he is a solid rotational blocking TE who you can win with that would best fit a Gap scheme. Can be used in Play action to catch the short pass, and can hold up in pass protection against good competition. Struggles with separation quickness because of his lack of agility and explosion
