BEST	Pre-Snap FBI, Rhythm Fades to Left, Deep Balls, Scramble to Run
WORST	Field Vision, Pocket Movement/Drops, Placement, Decision Making
PROJECTION	Back-up QB whose high football IQ, experience, competitive nature, and streaky placement can move a passing game when called upon. Limited role because of overall consistency, scattershot accuracy, and pocket movement skills. Would avoid offenses that want to use a lot of PA from under center that move the pocket often.
SCHEME FIT	Shotgun based offense that employs a lot of predetermined reads for its Quick Game elements but also embraces shot plays down the field
SUMMARY
15th year QB coming off an 8 game appearance in 2018 (starting 7, 21 starts in 3 seasons), spending the last 2 seasons in HC Dirk Koetter/OC Todd Monken's downfield passing attack. Before that spent multiple seasons in Chan Gailey's Single Back Spread offense in both Buffalo and New York. A good athlete throwing right-handed with adequate height and weight with good agility, balance, and flexibility, with solid arm strength and body control to deliver on the run or from multiple platforms in the pocket. In the passing game, shows solid mental processing Pre-Snap where he actively sets and adjusts protections, clearly identifying 1st and 2nd tier defenders to OL and backfield players. Adjusts plays well in situational football (Red Zone, 3rd down) even to late spin adjustments from 3rd tier defenders. Note 48 Wunderlic score was the highest for QB in history. Capable of showing efficient footwork in shorter drops from Shotgun, particularly rhythm Fade routes to outside receivers. Flashed athleticism in release, able to throw from multiple platforms both ind and out of the pocket. Shows solid touch on these throws able to match throw type with coverage and situation. Demonstrates solid mechanics, most often a consistent front front stride and good transfer of weight generating solid rotation and good 3/4 release point. On shot plays downfield he flashed not only touch but consistent solid arm strength to both sides of the field. Placement at its best when in rhythm or off predetermined read. Capable of solid poise in the pocket versus pressure, with many examples of good throws within structure. Flashed ability in the red zone to wait for 2nd window in-breaking routes with rushers bearing down on him. Aggressive thrower, shows good competitive toughness attacking match ups and giving his receivers a chance to make plays. Would point his number of game winning drives and comeback wins, shows a streaky ability to put drives together when it counts. As a runner, shows solid play strength, speed and competitiveness with the ball in his hands, he wants to make plays with his feet. Particularly effective in the Red Zone running Read Option type plays, able to withstand contact from 2nd level defenders for touchdowns, smells goal line well. In the passing game, struggles in his drop from both gun and under center (particularly the latter). Consistently drifts from from mid-line to throws on both sides, too often a detriment to play structure. and at times led directly to sacks or passes batted down at the LOS. Lacked awareness to the launch point. This drift would also show after the Drop, where he would Crow Hop play side into pass rushing lanes forcing him to throw off platform. Not confident that this poor habit can be corrected by coaching at this stage in his career, and its correlation with driving Type-1 throws on a line greater than 12 yards downfield. Also shows heavier feet in all pocket movements where he lacked efficiency; the Crow Hopping shows up often into throws unnecessary delaying his release, causing uneven shoulders, and even knocking him off rhythm when his heels clicked. The delayed release seemed exclusive to his left plant foot getting down late as his stride lengthened. Only adequate in decision making, struggles with reading leverage of Zone or Off Coverage. Too often threw vertical routes to capped space, or in breaking routes to soon to be contested space. Seemed to stick to first read often, sending it despite change or rotation. Only adequate in play speed, too often a beat late especially in routes that terminated in space. This became an issue in his RZ play, where he struggles to find tight windows in Man, Zone, Match coverage. As the season progressed, his adequate accuracy hurt the offense more, with a wide range of scatter shot misses to targets at the short and intermediate level. Later starts rarely saw runner's balls to in-breaking routes, unsure if some injury was effecting this? Shows marginal ability to extend plays, too often leaving the pocket early and is tied to is adequate decision making. Too often his shoulders and feet went parallel to the LOS and he eyes went to finding a hole to run through. Vision was severely limited when out of the pocket, only able to see receivers or check downs that were actually on his running path. Overall a back up QB whose high football IQ, experience, competitive nature, and streaky arm talent can move a passing game when called upon. Limited role because of overall consistency, scattershot accuracy, and pocket movement skills. Would avoid offenses that want to use a lot of PA from under center that move the pocket often.
